

OSCE will support Armenia and Azerbaijan in peace efforts, Chairman-in-Office says

Achieving sustainable and comprehensive peace between Armenia and Azerbaijan is one of the priorities of the OSCE, OSCE Chairman-in-Office, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade of the Republic of Malta, Ian Borg, said at a press conference in Yerevan alongside Armenian Foreign Minister Ararat Mirzoyan.

“Dialogue and diplomacy is the only way. We are convinced that constructive dialogue between equals guided by pragmatism and honesty, is indispensable for achieving a comprehensive and lasting settlement,” he said.

“The advances made on delimitation of the border are definitely valuable steps on that path. Tomorrow in Baku, I will convey these messages to my Azerbaijani interlocutors and call for a reliable and stable commitment in the negotiations,” said the OSCE Chair.

He emphasized that “after decades of conflict it is imperative for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan to finally achieve peace, security, and prosperity they deserve,” he added.

“As OSCE we stand ready to engage more,” Ian Borg said. “At the same time, we continue to support or national and international initiatives that create a positive momentum and produce tangible results to effectively overcome the conflict,” he added.

“We will support Armenia and Azerbaijan so that they can reach a comprehensive and stable peace agreement. We are aware that both countries prefer to resolve issues bilaterally, and we support this,” Borg said.

Nikol Pashinyan, Vladimir Putin hold private conversation

A private conversation between Prime Minister of the Republic of Armenia Nikol Pashinyan and Russian President Vladimir Putin took place in the Kremlin.

The President of the Russian Federation greeting the Armenian Prime Minister, noted that he is very happy about the meeting and is ready to discuss all issues of bilateral interest:

“We had a jubilee summit, the EAEU marked the 10th anniversary, cooperation within the framework of that international organization has positive impact on all countries, including Russia and Armenia. The increase in trade turnover for Armenia with EAEU countries has been significant since 2015 - 14 times.

As for bilateral relations, they are also developing successfully. First of all, we pay attention to economic cooperation. Last year saw significant increase in trade turnover, which is related to the increase in your exports to our country. The trade turnover between our countries amounted to more than seven billion dollars, such a volume has never been seen in our trade and economic relations. Of course, there are issues not only related to the increase in trade turnover, there are issues related to security in the region, we will not discuss them in open mode now, but there is an opportunity to talk about the entire spectrum of our relations, including security issues in the region, at the EAEU working platform.”

In his turn, the Prime Minister of Armenia thanked for the warm hospitality and for organizing the session of the Supreme Eurasian Economic Council at a high level.

“The last time we met was in December, during which, of course, there were a lot of issues that needed to be discussed. Of course, we have already discussed the economic sector during the session, and I am sure that now we will discuss the most important issues of bilateral relations, regional issues. I am also happy to see you,” said the Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan.

Alma-Ata declaration inclusion in peace treaty is crucial for regional stability-Ararat Mirzoyan

Armenia believes that by enshrining the principles of the 1991 Alma-Ata Declaration in the peace treaty being discussed with Azerbaijan, it can put an end to the long-standing conflict and establish a stable peace in the South Caucasus. This was stated by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Armenia Ararat Mirzoyan at a press conference with the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Malta and the current OSCE Chairman Ian Borg.

Mirzoyan said that at a meeting with the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Malta they discussed security issues in the South Caucasus. “I presented to my colleague the current situation in the South Caucasus, the events taking place at the last stage of negotiations between Armenia and Azerbaijan, including the details of the negotiations held in Almaty. In this context, I emphasized the agreement, confirmed on April 19 by the delimitation and border security commissions of the two countries, that the political basis for the delimitation process should be the 1991 Alma-Ata Declaration. This agreement reaffirmed the positions previously expressed by the Prime Minister of Armenia and the President of Azerbaijan on various platforms.

They agreed that the Alma-Ata Declaration should serve as the basis for mutual recognition of the territorial integrity of both countries and the delimitation process. The Prime Minister of Armenia and the President of Azerbaijan first agreed on this in Prague in 2022 and have since then had the opportunity to reaffirm this principle on various platforms. And I hope that enshrining this principle in a peace treaty and signing a peace treaty can put an end to this long-standing conflict and establish a stable and lasting peace in the region,” said the Armenian Foreign Minister.

Ararat Mirzoyan said that an important component of peace is also the unblocking of transport communications in the region, regarding which Armenia presented its vision with the “Crossroads of Peace” project. “We are not only ready, but also interested in re-establishing transport communication, in particular, in the first stage, railway communication with Azerbaijan, of course, understanding that all infrastructures will remain under the sovereignty of the countries through whose territory they pass, will act according to the jurisdiction of these countries and, of course, the regulations will be mutual and in accordance with the principle of equality,” said the Armenian Foreign Minister.

Mirzoyan added that in the context of geopolitical developments, the OSCE is facing serious challenges, and these challenges require all participating states to address existing problems with the effective use of the organization’s tools and mechanisms in the OSCE area of responsibility. He underscored that the provision of a comprehensive, inviolable and cooperative security concept is the basis of the creation and operation of the OSCE.

“The South Caucasus also faces serious challenges, and they, in turn, violate key principles such as territorial integrity and sovereignty of states. These are challenges that are directly related to the OSCE mandate and emphasize the importance of targeted participation of the structure,” Mirzoyan noted.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Armenia said that during the meeting they exchanged ideas on relations between Armenia and Malta, stressing that Armenia values relations with Malta and is ready to make active efforts to deepen those relations.

provide non-lethal assistance to Armenia through the European Peace Facility, and secondly, to increase the number of members in the EU observation mission. Vassilis Maragos noted that that they were making progress with the observation mission. “The process of deploying new observers is underway. As for the EU Peace Facility, discussions continue in the council,” said the EU Ambassador.

ICC should consider new Armenian genocide petition – Luis Moreno Ocampo

The International Criminal Court should new Armenian genocide petition,, ICC’s first Chief Prosecutor Luis Moreno Ocampo says in an article published by POLITICO.

Last month, the California-based Center for Truth and Justice (CFTJ) petitioned the International Criminal Court \(ICC\), where I served as the first chief prosecutor, to investigate Azerbaijan President Ilham Aliyev for genocide against Armenians in Armenia — and it’s a petition the ICC should consider.

“It’s a bitter reality that more than a century after the first widely recognized genocide of the modern era, where over a million Armenians were slaughtered by the Ottomans, Armenians are again the victims of genocide,” Mr. Ocampo says.

“Indeed, soon after the ethnic cleansing in Nagorno-Karabakh, Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan visited Azerbaijan to show his support. And Western political leaders seem to support Aliyev too — European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen has even called Azerbaijan a “crucial partner”,” he adds.

“All this is a sobering reminder of how little we’ve learned from history, and how vulnerable we still are to evil. In 1932, Albert Einstein wrote to Sigmund Freud, arguing that extreme nationalism could beget violence on a huge scale. It’s time the world understood this as well — and created new strategies to stop all genocide,” Ocampo continues.

During the ten years of its existence, the Eurasian Economic Union has become an important platform for close economic interaction among its member states.

The Prime Minister of the Republic of Armenia, Nikol Pashinyan, said at the session of the Supreme Eurasian Economic Council on May 8 in Moscow.

It is evident that the normative base of the EAEU continues to evolve, and the completion of this process is not yet imminent. It is important that this development occurs within the framework of economic logic. Only by respecting the interests of each member state and seeking constructive solutions that align with the interests of each member state can we maintain the effectiveness of the union.

We consider it necessary to centralize our efforts in order to take into account the national priorities of socio-economic development,” the Prime Minister noted.

In her discussions with Deputy Prime Minister Mher Grigoryan, Deputy Foreign Minister Mnatsakan Safaryan, other government officials, diplomatic corps and development partners, UN Country Team, civil society, women and youth, Ivana Živković emphasized UNDP's role as a strategic partner of the Government of Armenia in addressing complex development challenges for the benefit of people of Armenia, with focus on refugee crisis response, sustainable development, women and youth empowerment. In Sevan, Gegharkunik region, she got acquainted with the work of the automatic weather station modernized with funding from the Government of Japan, one among the 11 modernized stations in Gegharkunik, Tavush, and Syunik regions, increasing the weather monitoring and observation accuracy, and country wide coverage up to 80 percent. Forests, wetlands, and landscapes to restore in Armenia with World Bank support

The World Bank's Board of Executive Directors approved the RESILAND: Armenia Resilient Landscapes Project (RESILAND Armenia) that aims to help the government to strengthen community engagement and improve the management of forests, wetlands, and protected areas in selected locations in Armenia.

According to a press release by the World Bank, supported by the Global Environment Facility (GEF), in the amount of $5.45 million and co-financed by the Government of Sweden, in the amount of $3.65 million grant, the project will also reinforce the institutional framework for sustainable landscape management. It will expand the areas under sustainable management, mitigate forest fragmentation, increase tree cover density, and improve the management of neglected abandoned wetlands.

Additionally, the project will promote sustainable economic activities and foster the creation of environmentally sustainable jobs in selected rural communities. New and restored forests and wetlands will contribute to reduced greenhouse gas emissions and will enhance the country's resilience to the impacts of climate change.

"Armenia's beautiful landscapes are one of the country's biggest assets. This asset has been threatened by man-made deforestation and landscape degradation, fueled by unsustainable practices of communities and weak environmental oversight. The RESILAND project addresses forest degradation by providing alternative livelihoods for communities and by strengthening oversight mechanisms through improvements to the policy framework," said Carolin Geginat, World Bank Country Manager for Armenia.

Armenia, known for its rich biological diversity, faces a unique challenge as it is a forest-poor country, with only 11.2 percent of its territory covered by forests. According to a World Bank report, Armenia's forestry sector has the potential to contribute to the country's social, economic, and cultural well-being through forest and landscape restoration efforts. Restoring existing and planting new forests, preserving wetlands, and establishing protected areas also contributes to enhanced natural assets and provide valuable services that support human well-being and the economy. Each hectare of forest is estimated to deliver on average $417 per year in total value from a number of ecosystem services (or $138 million annually).

Border issues should be resolved so that they do not become a casus belli for Azerbaijan to attack Armenia - Swiss MP

Stefan Müller-Altermatt, a member of the National Council of Switzerland, in an interview with Armenpress, expressed an opinion that the Armenian-Azerbaijani border issues must be resolved at some point, and the terrible legacy of Stalin must be overcome, because otherwise they are always a possible casus belli that Azerbaijan can use to attack Armenia.

The interview is presented below:

- Azerbaijan has violated the territorial integrity of Armenia, refuses to return Armenian POWs as well as continues to make aggressive announcements, why doesn't the European Union impose any sanctions on Azerbaijan or Aliyev himself?

- Because of a combination of disinterest and self-interest. Europe and the USA are completely absorbed in terms of security policy with the wars in Ukraine and Israel. And because of the sanctions against Russia, Europe is dependent on other oil and gas suppliers. And then there is the fact that Azerbaijan is very actively involved in political processes in Europe. "Caviar diplomacy" is now a recognised term. And unfortunately, it is successful: there are also among Western politicians weak people who throw their values overboard for a few conveniences.

- How important would be the deepening of relations between Armenia and the European Union for the security and prosperity of the region? How would you assess the high-level meeting of Armenia-EU-US in Brussels on April 5?

- The meeting was of enormous importance. Azerbaijan's nervous provocations in the week before 5 April proved this. Europe's commitment to Armenia's security was long overdue.

In the end, Armenia is once again a pawn of the geopolitical situation. The country clearly decided in favour of democracy and the rule of law in 2018. It is then also the task of the Western community of values to protect this country when the surrounding authoritarian states, which are opposed to democracy and the rule of law, attack it. Russia, as the leading power in the authoritarian bloc, will do everything in its power to keep Armenia in its hands. That is why rapid and fruitful talks with the European Union are extremely important.

And when I say "quickly", I can certainly give a date: Armenia needs comprehensive security guarantees from the West before the end of COP29 in Baku. Because I am very sure that Aliyev will lose any friendly face after COP29 and that Putin will also force him to take violent action. But there is no way back for Armenia. That is why the West must now really show its colours for Armenia - quickly.

- Recently, Armenia and Azerbaijan reached an agreement on starting the border delimitation process based on the  page 10

Alma-Ata Declaration.
How would you evaluate this agreement and, in your opinion, can it bring peace to the two countries and the South Caucasus region?

- At some point, the border issues must be resolved and this terrible Stalinist legacy overcome. Especially from the Armenian point of view, because otherwise they are always a possible casus belli that Azerbaijan can use to attack Armenia. The agreement with Azerbaijan itself is probably less important than the effective work on the border - the Aliyev regime does not honour any agreements anyway. However, if the demarcation can be carried out in a way that is acceptable to Armenia, then effective, visible facts will have been created that even a tyrant cannot ignore.

The events in Tavush show that it is extremely difficult on the Armenian side. At the same time, it is also a sign to the world: Armenian democracy is stable enough to be able to deal with even such understandably elementary issues.

- In recent years there have been a lot of talks about the need to unblock the regional communications in the South Caucasus. Azerbaijan demands the so-called "Zangezur corridor" from Armenia by threatening at the same time to get it by force. How would you assess such an aggressive and unprovoked behaviour of Azerbaijan?

- Unfortunately, this behaviour is logical for the Aliyev regime. After violently destroying and ethnically cleansing the Republic of Artsakh, he now needs new claims against Armenia. Because he draws his raison d'être from the enemy image of Armenia: Aliyev is a kleptocrat, a tyrant who robs his own people. With the mineral resources in the Caspian Sea, the Azerbaijani people should actually be among the richest in the world. But the money only ends up in the pockets of the regime and its loyal followers. Now imagine what would happen if the Armenian people, who have no such mineral resources, were to achieve economic prosperity as well as democracy, freedom of expression, the rule of law, etc.. It would be a total defeat for Aliyev. That is why he has to keep Armenia small and attack it again and again - just as Putin is condemned to attack Ukraine again and again.

- In response to these claims of the Azerbaijani side, last year the Government of Armenia initiated the "Crossroads of Peace" project. What is your opinion on this initiative?

- It is the logical and clever response to the Azerbaijani demands, because "Crossroads of Peace" takes up the arguments of the other side and exposes them as a pretext for chauvinist aggression. Azerbaijan justifies the demand for the "Zangezur Corridor" with the interrupted communication routes. If this were really the problem, then one would have to agree to "Crossroads of Peace", because this plan addresses this problem with a much more comprehensive solution than just the Zangezur Corridor.

Apart from these tactical considerations, it is of course the case that open borders, trade and understanding always support peace. But Moscow, Baku and Ankara are not interested in any of this. They are only interested in securing their influence and the regime - and are therefore against the values that Armenia so impressively achieved in 2018.

House of Senators of Uruguay unanimously approves draft law declaring April 24 as ‘Armenian Genocide Memorial Day’

On May 7, the House of Senators of Uruguay unanimously voted in favor of the draft law declaring April 24 as “Armenian Genocide Memorial Day.”

The law mandates that all state television and radio channels will simultaneously address the topic of the Armenian Genocide every year on April 24, the Armenian Embassy in Uruguay said.

The senators, who made speeches during the session, representing different political parties, reaffirmed their friendly attitude towards Armenia and the Armenian people, the importance of not forgetting such crimes against humanity.

They highlighted the opening of the Armenian Embassy in Montevideo.

The senators noted that Armenia still faces security challenges and reminded that in 2022, the Senate unanimously condemned the blockade of the Lachin Corridor and expressed solidarity with the people of Nagorno-Karabakh. According to the source, the draft law has already been transferred to the House of Representatives, where it should also be put to a vote.

Vahagn Khachaturyan invites California Governor to Armenia

On a working visit to the US, Armenian President Vahagn Khachaturyan met with California Governor Gavin Newsom in Sacramento.

The sides highly appreciated the close and multi-layered three-decade cooperation between Armenia and the in all directions. It was emphasized that the Armenian community, which is mostly represented in California, has its own role in Armenian-American relations.

President Vahagn Khachaturyan emphasized that the multi-sectoral cooperation with the US, and in particular with the state of California, is of special importance for Armenia in a number of ways.

The President noted that the high-tech sector has significantly strengthened its position in the Armenian economy in recent years, and since a number of the largest companies in that field are represented in California, “Silicon Valley”, there is a need to promote cooperation between Armenia and California.

Governor Gavin Newsom was interested in the developments of Armenia’s economic policy in recent years, and particularly in the measures implemented by the state during the Covid pandemic and the period following the pandemic.

President Vahagn Khachaturyan noted that in the conditions of the pandemic crisis, the Armenian government implemented a number of steps that enabled the country’s economy to quickly recover in the post-covid period.

The President stressed that the implementation of such programs became possible as a result of democratic reforms and strengthening of democratic institutions implemented in the political and economic life of Armenia in recent years. In this context, Vahagn Khachaturyan also thanked the US senior leadership for the support provided to Armenia in strengthening democracy and implementing democratic reforms.

During the conversation, the parties exchanged thoughts on regional and global developments and existing challenges. Both sides emphasized the importance of settling the hot conflicts through peaceful negotiation and finding solutions.

Referring to the regional realities of the South Caucasus and the principles of Armenia’s foreign policy, President Vahagn Khachaturyan reaffirmed Armenia’s determination and unequivocal position to build good-neighborly relations with its neighbors, an expression of which is the border delimitation process currently being carried out for the first time between Armenia and Azerbaijan.

At the end of the meeting, President Vahagn Khachaturyan invited Governor Gavin Newsom to visit Armenia any time convenient to him, which will be an additional incentive for the expansion of cooperation between Armenia and California.

Ruben Vardanyan sends message to Aurora Prize candidates from Baku prison

During the 2024 Aurora Prize award ceremony, Veronika Zonabend, the wife of Aurora Humanitarian Initiative co-founder Ruben Vardanyan, read Ruben Vardanyan's message from Baku prison. Veronika Zonabend's speech is presented below:

"Dear guests and participants of the 8th Aurora Prize Ceremony, from Armenia, Yerevan,

I am standing here in the garden of IDEa Foundation, which was established almost 25 years ago by Ruben and me, together with our partners and friends. Aurora was born within those roots, founded by Nourbar, Vartan, and Ruben. Before I read the message from Ruben, I want to express my personal deep and sincere gratitude to all of you, to the Aurora community, to Aurora leadership, for support and compassion. Being over 200 days imprisoned in Baku, Ruben and other Armenian prisoners were supported by you, and you were standing in solidarity with them, with your bold actions demanding their immediate and unconditional release. More recently, during Ruben's hunger strike for 20 days, you raised your voices, together with the voice of the family, and this is invaluable. Thank you again.

Here is Ruben's message: Baku prison, 2024.

"In 2015, in the run up to the 100th commemoration of the Armenian Genocide, Vartan, Nourbar and I, reflecting on how to mark the fateful day, decided that we should not only honor the memory of those who perished during that catastrophe; we also wanted to express our gratitude to those who helped them and saved their lives.

We wanted to change the Armenian narrative from that of victimhood and the past, to a new perspective: facing the future with hope.

We launched this initiative to express gratitude on behalf of our nation, honoring modern heroes, helping them carry on with their hard work and promoting good deeds. We were dreaming about Yerevan to become a humanitarian capital of the world, joining together as one nation with the Armenian Diaspora scattered around the globe as the result of the Genocide.

With Aurora, we draw international attention to real heroes of today, those who risk their own wellbeing and lives, and who find faith and a path forward in helping others.

Thanks to Aurora, I met people who taught me the most important lesson: remaining true to human values and your own principles, irrespective of the situation, and following your path. My decision to move to Artsakh — Nagorno Karabakh — was motivated by the Aurora heroes: I made a choice to be with the people who needed help and wanted to help in any way I could. Being here, totally isolated from the world for nearly eight months, I have a lot of time to reflect.

I have no regrets about taking that path. I am deeply grateful to you for inspiring me to do the right thing. Now, I understand much better what motivates Marguerite Barankitse, Tom Catena, and other Aurora laureates, and why they have this strong belief in the power of one individual to make a difference. There is simply no choice but to try.

Unfortunately, our world has not become kinder through your good work, but this means that what you do is more important than ever. Your commitment to helping others, in this joint mission of ours, gives me strength here. I am now more convinced than ever before, that values and principles are more important than even life itself.

I wish you every success in your mission, and I am sending my warm congratulations to this year's laureates. I am confident that together, we can do a lot to make the world a better and a kinder place for everyone. As Marguerite likes to say, love always prevails. So, let love and values prevail. Let all of us be prepared to give more than we ever hope to receive in return, and that each of us can make a big difference."

EAFJD calls for action to protect the historic Armenian Quarter in Jerusalem

The European Armenian Federation for Justice and Democracy (EAFJD) has addressed a letter to the Head of the Mission of Israel to the EU and NATO, the Members of the European Parliament Delegation for Relations with Israel, and the main Jewish organizations in the EU and Belgium, addressing the alarming circumstances threatening the historic Armenian quarter in Jerusalem. The letter urges the addressees to use their leverage to call on the Israeli authorities to take appropriate action and stop the highly destructive developments in Jerusalem.

Dating back to the 4th century, the Armenian presence in Jerusalem holds deep historical significance. However, this historic quarter is currently under threat due to aggressive actions by extremists, settlers, and businesspeople, seeking to appropriate the land. Recent incidents, including an attack led by individuals associated with Israeli-Australian businessman Danny Rubenstein, have targeted the Armenian community, resulting in injuries and arrests among Armenian residents. Despite protests and calls for protection, the Israeli authorities have not taken decisive action to safeguard the Armenian quarter from these hostile incursions. The letter can be found here.

In the light of these developments, the EAFJD urges the Israeli authorities to protect the status quo of Jerusalem and refrain from altering the demographic composition, institutional structure, and the physical, cultural and historical character of Jerusalem. Drawing parallels between the suffering endured by both Armenians and Jews throughout history and having had to fight racial hatred, the EAFJD emphasizes that the Israeli authorities have a duty to prevent such occurrences in Jerusalem.

As European citizens, the EAFJD and its committees across 14 countries in Europe, call on stakeholders in the EU to utilize their influence in advocating for the preservation of the Armenian quarter in Jerusalem. It is imperative that the historic quarters of Jerusalem are maintained, and that Israel takes proactive measures to prevent further destruction and intimidation within the Armenian quarter.

The EAFJD remains steadfast in its commitment to defending the rights and heritage of the Armenian community in Jerusalem.

The Armenian cultural heritage in Nagorno-Karabakh is gradually being destroyed – Geghard SAF

The destruction of St. Ascension (St. Hambardzum) Church in Berdzor is yet another act of vandalism by Azerbaijan, aimed at the eradication of Armenian cultural heritage, “Geghard” scientific and analytical foundation said in a statement.

“On May 11, 2024, a satellite image published on the Internet clearly showed that Azerbaijan had completely destroyed the St. Ascension (St. Hambardzum) Church in Berdzor. This is another act of vandalism - a typical behaviour for Azerbaijan, where one of the primary aims is the eradication of Armenian cultural heritage in the occupied territories.

“This is cultural genocide, which is characterized by deliberate disregard or destruction of the cultural values of an ethno-religious or religious group and is one of the actions associated with genocide. The objective is to establish that this group never lived in the designated area and had no cultural presence there,” the Foundation said.

“Geghard” scientific and analytical foundation reminds that back in 2022, Azerbaijan’s “Public Organization for the Protection of Monuments” proposed converting the Surb Hambardzum Church in Berdzor into a mosque.

“It is important to note that Azerbaijan’s state policy, under the dictatorial leadership of Aliyev, has openly declared its intention to continue the destruction of Armenian heritage built over the past thirty years. The most evident instance of this was the photograph shown by BBC News on March 25, 2021, depicting the complete destruction of the St. Astvatsatsin Church in Mekhakhavan, built in 2013. (<https://www.bbc.com/news/av/world-europe-56530604>).

“Thus, with the tacit consent of the civilized world, the Armenian cultural heritage in the territory of Artsakh is gradually being destroyed. There is little doubt that Azerbaijan will complete its planned cultural genocide, as evidenced by the events in Nakhijevan and other territories under its control.

“Geghard” Scientific and Analytical Foundation strongly condemns yet another act of vandalism by the state of Azerbaijan,” the statement reads.
